

The more information that becomes available on the interference BPL causes to HF communications the more alarming this is. Japan decided against the use of BPL because the interference is so high that it will render HF communications almost unusable for all services where BPL is being used. I hope the FCC can take a objective approach to this without the pressure of more ways to access the Internet clouding judgement.